Updated October 2021

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million, and the number of people in the public sector who are employed in health care has increased from 1.5 million to 2.5 million (Department of Health 2000).

There are a number of reasons for the increase in the number of people employed in the public sector. One reason is that the public sector has become a major employer in the UK. Another reason is that the public sector has become a major employer in the health care sector. A third reason is that the public sector has become a major employer in the education sector. A fourth reason is that the public sector has become a major employer in the social care sector.

The increase in the number of people employed in the public sector has led to a number of changes in the way that the public sector is organised. One change is that the public sector has become more decentralised. Another change is that the public sector has become more marketised. A third change is that the public sector has become more customer-focused. A fourth change is that the public sector has become more performance-oriented.

The changes in the way that the public sector is organised have led to a number of challenges for the public sector. One challenge is that the public sector has become more fragmented. Another challenge is that the public sector has become more competitive. A third challenge is that the public sector has become more customer-focused. A fourth challenge is that the public sector has become more performance-oriented.

The challenges that the public sector faces are a result of the changes in the way that the public sector is organised.
